RECOMMENDED BY FLEUR PELLERIN

Paris, Washington DC, 04.09.2015, 04:47 Time

USPA NEWS - Ieur Pellerin, Minister of Culture and Communication, has proposed to the President of the Republic the appointment of Jean-Marc Bustamante to the direction of the National School of Fine Arts of Paris, on the proposal of the selection committee that s 'met August 28, 2015.

For twenty years he taught in several European schools including the Rijksakademie van Beeldende of Amsterdam and at the Akademie der Künste in Munich Bildenden. He is a professor at the National School of Fine Arts in Paris since 1998.

Jean-Marc Bustamante wants to place the artist at the heart of the school project, increase its international visibility by including it among the leading institutions in a globalised world. He wants to encourage greater cross in the school while respecting its identity. With his experience he intends to respond to the school's development challenges that the Minister of Culture and Communication has set out on the occasion of Audience Young Creation to give new impetus to an institution that plays a major role in higher arts education. 25 candidates responded to the call for applications. After an initial assessment, the selection committee proceeded with the hearing of each of the eight candidates on the basis of the project they had previously sent.
